It appears that there are five of the Washburn brothers, the youngest being Congressman Washburn, of Minnesota. All have been in Congress except Charles A. Washburn, of California, who at one time was Minister Resident to Paraguay from 1863 to 1868.

The State Board of Pharmacy will meet at Janesville, on Tuesday, May 23d, to examine candidates and issue certificates of registration. All druggists or clerks that have not received registration blanks should at once apply to some member of the board of the same, or direct to the Secretary of the Board, E. B. Heimstreet, Janesville.

A Washington dispatch says that the bill introduced by Mr. Caswell, of this State, for the protection of innocent purchasers of patented articles passed, today, by a large majority. The bill repeals section 4919 of the Revised Statutes, and substitutes a proviso that no action for damages or proceedings in equity shall be sustained, nor shall a party be held liable for the use of any patented article when it shall appear on trial that defendant purchased such article in open market. A letter was read by Mr. Caswell from the commissioner of patents, approving the bill.

More than twenty years ago Mr. C. H. McCormick, of reaper fame, lost his baggage in a railway accident on the Pennsylvania Central railway. He began suit in 1862, and since that time he has had four trials and each time beating the company. Once the judgment he received was only six cents, and the last time, which was only recently, he received $13,248.34. Whether this will end the contest is not known. He has spent thousands of dollars in suing for his rights, and if his attorneys are not much different from the attorneys in other parts of the country, there will not be much left of the fruits of his great victory when they are paid. The expenses have several times eaten up the value of his burned baggage, but like Mr. Beecher's farming, he is doing it from principle and doesn't mind the cost.

There are no corporations in the world that are more prompt and generous in meeting great emergencies than railway companies. This fact is substantiated very often. On Monday, Dr. Darius Mason, of Milwaukee, received a telegram that John F. Williams, proprietor of the Dousman house, at Prairie du Chien was in an extremely critical condition, and his assistance was asked for. The afternoon train for the West had left Milwaukee when the telegram reached Dr. Mason, which would cause a delay of some ten hours in the doctor reaching the bedside of his dying friend. The case demanded prompt action, and the Milwaukee & St. Paul responded as quickly as the urgency of the occasion required. A special train was immediately made up, and the doctor was carried across the State, two hundred miles, in a little over five hours. Such an exhibition of kindness and good will takes strong hold of human sympathy.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in banc will not make public their decision in the Guiteau case till next Monday, the 22d. One report has it that the judges are divided on the question of giving Guiteau a new trial; another says they have agreed unanimously that the villain must hang according to the sentence pronounced by Judge Cox. The chief points which Reed made for Guiteau were that while the shooting was done in Washington, death occurred in New Jersey, and therefore the criminal court of the District of Columbia had no jurisdiction of the case. Another legal quibble was that one of the former wives of Guiteau was permitted to testify against him. Whether these technicalities will be permitted to defeat the ends of justice remains to be seen. The judges of the court in banc are men of high legal attainments and are recognized as profound lawyers, and the country is not ready to believe that they will give the murderous wretch a new trial.

The funeral of ex-Governor Washburn will take place at LaCrosse on Thursday. The special train from Madison bearing Governor Rusk and the State committee to Chicago, to meet the remains, went to that city this afternoon. The special train which will convey the remains to LaCrosse will leave Chicago at nine o'clock this evening over the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul railway. The railroads have been prompt and generous in putting their roads at the services of the Governor, and yesterday he received a dispatch from Mr. S. S. Merrill, general manager of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, extending the courtesies of his line to the committee appointed to escort the remains of ex-Governor Washburn to LaCrosse. The train bearing the remains of the deceased Governor, will go direct to LaCrosse from Chicago by the way of Milwaukee and Portage.

The Adjutant General of the State, C. P. Chapman, has issued an order directing as a mark of respect to ex-Governor Washburn that the officers of the National Guard on all occasions of ceremony during the ensuing three months shall wear the usual badge of mourning on the left arm and sword hilt, and that all colors will be furled and draped with crepe during that time.

Special to the Gazette.

MADISON, May 15.—G. A. Libbey & Son, of Janesville, have been awarded the contract for the pumping machinery of the Madison water-works.

CHIPPEWA RIVER BILL.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Representative Pound, of Wisconsin, returned from New York to-day, and was interviewed by the Sentinel correspondent in relation to the bill mentioned in last night's dispatch, and which is to declare the Chippewa River navigable for logging purposes, and legalize the acts of the Wisconsin Legislature conferring rights and privileges upon the Dells Improvement Company. Mr. Pound, from the part he took in the famous Dells fight in 1872 and 1873, is well aware of all the circumstances, and he said there was no cause for the anxiety of Knapp, Stont & Co. He said that Congress might as well declare a heavy dew navigable. The navigability of a river or stream was a question of fact, and any declaration by Congress did not or would not alter in one way or the other. As to that part of the bill legalizing what has been done by the Wisconsin Legislature, Mr. Pound said that he negotiated for the purchase of the Cochett claim, estimated value $1,200,000,000. In 1879 he found one of the heirs in Lima, named Galacius Cochett, aged about 34 years. He obtained from a Mr. Landrean information that Galacius had a right to the claim as the heir of his father, who discovered the guano. He made a contract with Galacius Cochett and then hunted up the record of his baptism. The registry set out that the son of Alexander Cochett and his wife Comancha was baptised at 1 year of age by name Galacius, and the witness had him identified. Dr. Franklin Stewart testified that he purchased a share of the Cochett claim from Hevener, and sold a share and a half of the claim to Shepherd.

WHAT IT COST.

CLINTON, Ill., May 15.—It cost McLean county $3,000 to hang Devine and pay the expenses of his two trials in this county.

THE ASSASSIN.

BOSTON, Mass., May 15.—The statement that the petition which has been circulated in Boston for a commutation of Guiteau's sentence has received numerous signatures is denied in quarters. Several prominent physicians say that they believe it will not make much headway here. The position taken by many physicians seems to be that Guiteau is medically insane, but that he has been decided after a fair trial to be responsible for his act and sentenced having been duly pronounced, it should be executed.

PIONEERS.

MADISON, May 15.—The annual meeting of the Wisconsin Pioneer Association will be held at Madison on Wednesday, the 7th of June. The membership includes all persons who were residents of the Territory prior to the adoption of the State Constitution in 1848. The meeting will be addressed by President John H. Rountree, of Platteville, General A. C. Dodge, of Iowa, and others.

WAGNER SLEEPER.

CHICAGO, May 15.—It is a generally accepted fact that the Wagner Sleeping Car company is to supersede the Pullman Sleeping Car company on the lines of the Chicago & Northwestern company. This can be ascribed to the extensive and possibly controlling interest owned in the Chicago & Northwestern by W. H. Vanderbilt and his large influence in the Wagner company. The Pullman contract with the Chicago & Northwestern has expired.

THE COCHET CLAIM.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—The Cochett claim was the subject of inquiry to-day in the case of James D. Mantrop, charged with embezzling 3,000 shares of the stock of the Denver City Consolidated Mining Company and of disposing of the stock and holding on to $4,500 belonging to Peter Hevener. Hevener testified that he negotiated for the purchase of the Cochett claim, estimated value $1,200,000,000. In 1879 he found one of the heirs in Lima, named Galacius Cochett, aged about 34 years. He obtained from a Mr. Landrean information that Galacius had a right to the claim as the heir of his father, who discovered the guano. He made a contract with Galacius Cochett and then hunted up the record of his baptism. A sewing machine agent who lives not a thousand miles away, stopped at a house in this county to sell a machine. The lady of the house, a fine appearing Caucasian, told him that she could not buy a machine unless her husband consented, and told the agent to go out to the barn and see him. Mr. Sewing machine man went and found a full blooded African milking a cow. He returned to the house and informed the lady that he could find no one but a nigger there, whereupon she informed him that the "nigger" was her husband. The agent scratched his head and remarked, "Madam, what made you marry a black man?" The reply came at once as follows, "I had to take my choice between a 'nigger' and a sewing machine agent and I took the former." That settled it.

A MAN OF GRIEF.

Never was the old man's snow-white head, A wrinkled look upon his face; "Why come you, sir?" I gently said, "Unto this solemn burial place?"

"I come to weep awhile for one Whom in her life I held most dear—Alas! her hands were quickly run— And now she lies a sleeping here."

"Oh, tell me of your precious wife, For she was very dear I know—It must have been a blissful life You led with her your treasure so?"

"My wife is a mother in the ground, And her bones are sleeping now, And I'll think no more of her, For a driving home the family cow."

"And see, she's standing at the stile, And looks out from the window wide, Her forty babies by her side."

"Old man, you must be mad!" I cried, "Or else you do but just with me! How is it that your wife has died And yet can here and living be?"

How it is while she drives the cow, She's not out from the window wide, And loiters, as you said just now, With forty babies by her side?"

The old man raised his snowy head— I have a sainted wife in Heaven; I am a Mormon, sir," he said.

"My sainted wife on earth are seven," —Denver Tribune.

JACK AND TOM.

When Mrs. Hudson's little baby was born all the neighbors were very sorry for her—left in that cold and cruel way, with a child to bring up!

But Mrs. Hudson, a fine looking young woman of six-and-twenty, was like the rest of them, able to take care of herself. She had a relative or two in a distant State, and she was known as reliable and honest. The letters she wrote brought her certain loans, with which she started a small shop for millinery and trimmings.

She had good taste in the opinion of the neighborhood, and when she sold the ribbon and flowers for a bonnet she trimmed it for nothing. When she sold a dress she gave in a pattern to make it by. These things cost her nothing but time, and she was industrious. They drew custom.

In time the store was enlarged, all the loans were paid, little Tom was kept at school as well dressed as any child there, and Mrs. Hudson went to church of a Sunday in a black silk dress that rustled with richness. No one envied her good fortune, especially as it did not make her proud.

She had a temper, but she had too much policy to offend customers.

Yes, she had a temper. That was what sent Jack away; she had boxed his ears. He had a habit of chewing tobacco, and had spit upon her clean scoured hearth, and there had been a quarrel, and the blow fell.

"I never lifted my hand against you, Sally," said Jack. "But this I'll say, I'll bear no more. You'll never see me again."

He had walked out of the house and had shipped on a vessel bound for China.

Sally had believed he only meant to frighten her and would come back. Six months afterward their baby came into the world, but Jack had never been heard of since.

She crept over it still in secret, for she had been very much in love with Jack, and had thought him very fond of her. And she was proud of Tom, and fonder of him for looking like his father. She scolded him when he needed scolding, but his home was happy for all that. Only when he grew to be old enough to leave school did any serious conflict of opinion take place between the boy and his mother. It was a Saturday night, after the shutters were put up, that began.

"The business is so big now, Tom," said Mrs. Hudson, "that it will take us both. I'll teach you all about it at once, and when you are twenty-one I'll take you regularly into partnership. It will be yours after me, and I've no doubt," said the mother, with a forebodings of maternal jealousy in her eye, that some day your wife will be behind the cash desk, there."

Tom, who was dutifully casting up his mother's weekly accounts for her, laid down his pen and looked at her.

"It's no use talking that way, mother," he said. "The shop will be yours, and not mine, to the end. I won't keep it. I don't mean to stand behind a counter. I don't call that man's work."

"My goodness, Tom, what notions have you got into your head?" cried Mrs. Hudson. "Man's work, indeed! Why, there's more men than women in stores; and you can be cashier and buyer, and take stock, and all that. Lizzie, the girl, helps me now; and I could get a regular salesman or saleswoman."

"Mother," said Tom. "I won't go into business of this sort, at all. I shall go to sea, and get to be a Captain in time. I hope. What I'd like is the navy, if I had a chance; but anyhow, the sea."

"You couldn't be anything but a common sailor, Tom," said the poor woman. "Think of your education."

"Such as it is, I do," said Tom; "and very thankful I am for it, but a sailor's life is the life for me. No shop is; I know it."

"It's a store; it's a good business. I've made it what it is," cried Mrs. Hudson, "and you despise it!"

"I don't. You're the smartest woman I know, mother," said Tom; "but I won't keep shop—or store. I won't sell bonnets. It's absurd to think of it."

"Half of it is dry goods," sobbed Mrs. Hudson.

But the trouble had begun. It went with her to church on Sunday after keeping her wife awake all night. Arguments began. The mother at last no longer implored; she asserted her authority. Tom was not of age, and at last Tom was not as respectful as he should have been, and there was a regular quarrel, and Mrs. Hudson boxed her son's ears.

The next morning she went down to her little dining-room very early. The gray dawn was in the sky, but a shutter had been left open; "very carelessly," she said to herself, and by the light that fell through it she saw a letter lying on the table.

She took it up. It had no postmark, but it was formally addressed to her—To Mrs. Sarah Hudson.

"If it should be Jack come back after all," she thought, and tore it open. Within, on a sheet of paper, were these words:

"Mother, I'm off. I won't have my ears boxed; I won't be treated like a child. I shall ship at once. Home has grown to be too hot to hold me." —Tom.

The boy had his father's temper as well as his father's face.

The poor woman turned giddy and staggered to a seat, and hid her face for a while.

She had lived for Tom. He was her life. Her fixed idea of having him in the business came only of her longing; that they should not be parted, and now he had gone; he had left her like this; left her as his father had before him, and for the same cause.

A little while after this, the servant girl, Susan, coming slowly down the stairs, tying her apron as she came, saw to her horror the neat figure of her mistress in her trim black cashmere, lying prone upon the floor. She held a letter crushed in her hand, and was quite insensible.

Tom was a sailor, at least on the way to be one. He had shipped as one of the crew of an ocean steamer, and for the time to sleep in the crowded room of a sailors' boarding house.

It was filled with little cots, and it was close, and not too clean. Some of the men were intoxicated, some were talking to each other in the dark, others swearing at them for disturbing them at that hour. It was two o'clock. Tom had been in New York four days, and his life had not been a pleasant one.

Now, as he lay in the dark and thought, the boy of sixteen years grew soft-hearted, and his pillow was wet with tears.

"Young chap," said a voice at his ear.

"Well?" said Tom, starting. "Do you mean me?"

"Yes," said the voice. And a big man, whom he had noticed in the next cot, sat down on the edge of his bed.

"I've been watching you for a couple of days, and I see as there's something on your mind. If freezing it would help you, why, I'm old enough to be your father, and I feel a kind of hankering to know more of you. You look like a little brother o'mine that died when he was a young chap like you. Don't mind me. I've done it myself. You're crying."

"It isn't like a man, I know," said Tom, who had never been alone in the world before. "I'm ashamed of it. But, you see, I ran away from mother. She's been good to me—too good; but she wanted me to go into the rag shop—dry goods, they call it—and I didn't like the idea, and something happened that made me angry, and here I am. I'm thinking of poor mother. I—I'm sorry now. I—but it's no use."

"You can write to her penitent-like," said the man.

"But I won't be there, you see. She'll miss me at meals and at night. I think I've been wrong. Anyhow, it's rough on poor mother, so good as she's been to me."

"We're apt to be rough to women that love us," said the man, speaking softly in the dark. "What's your name lad?"

"Tom Hudson," said the boy.

The sailor gave a start.

"You didn't speak of your father," said he. "Is your mother a widow?"

Despite himself, the boy began to weep again.

"Hang it! That's the worst of it," he said. "My father—and a precious scoundrel he must have been—ran off and left my mother before I was born. She's the smartest woman that ever lived. She's kept us both, and she's made money. A lady, mother is, and a good woman. I take after my confined father. I expect to leave her, after all, like that."

"Your father's name was Jack, I guess," said the sailor. He lived at Wharf Town."

"Yes. Did you know him?" asked Tom.

"Knew him well," said the man. "A darned fool he was to leave your mother. And she hasn't married?"

"She says she never would, because she might not be a widow," said Tom. "Law gives her the right, but she wouldn't take it. She's had offers—good ones—but I'm proud to say she's very strict about duty. Besides, she's fond of that rascal of a father of mine to this day. A pair of us—we deserve to be hanged."

"You do," replied the old sailor. "But, look here, lad, don't tell me there wasn't any particular reason for your going off when you did. Didn't something happen of a peculiar nature? Waren't nothing said nor done more than usual?"

"Well, mother boxed my ears," said Tom.

"I thought so," said the sailor. Look here, she boxed your father's before he cut his stick. There's that excuse for him. However, wouldn't you like to go home to your mother again, and at least leave home square and fair and decent?"

"Ah, it's too late now," said Tom.

"No, lad," said the man, taking his hand in his. "No, lad, not too late. You're under age, and your father can break your agreement with any captain. I'm your father, Tom. I'm Jack Hudson. I didn't know you were on the face of the earth. Tom, and I'd have gone back to Sally long ago only what I had done set her free, and I was afraid she'd take the advantage the law gives her and marry, and I'd only upset everything."

"You do," replied the old sailor.

"No, lad," said the man, taking his hand in his. "No, lad, not too late. You're under age, and your father can break your agreement with any captain. I'm your father, Tom. I'm Jack Hudson. I didn't know you were on the face of the earth. Tom, and I'd have gone back to Sally long ago only what I had done set her free, and I was afraid she'd take the advantage the law gives her and marry, and I'd only upset everything."

"You'll go back to your mother, Tom. And I'm going too. If she wants me to stay, I'll stay; if not, I'll be off again. I don't deserve forgiveness."

"No, neither of us do," said Tom.

"Neither of us."

Susan stood behind the counter of the store. Since her son's departure Mrs. Hudson had not showed her face. She was heart-broken; she sat with her head on her hand, and refused to see everyone. Susan told all the story to the customers, who sympathized and were indignant. Such a mother—such a woman to be so used!

"He's an ungrateful wretch!" said one matron, as she walked away with the piece of tape which had been her excuse for coming in. "Tom Hudson is an ungrateful wretch."

"So he is, Mrs. Morely," said a voice.

And she was a matron, as she walked away with the piece of tape which had been her excuse for coming in. "Tom Hudson is an ungrateful wretch."

by the name of Hickey was being fleeced at the time the officers made the raid, but he was so crazed with liquor that he did not seem to realize that he was a victim of misplaced confidence, and insisted that he was in town for the purpose of having a "little fun with the boys," and didn't care for expense; Hickey was before Judge Patten this morning, and plead guilty to the charge of gambling, and was fined $10 and costs. Henderson was soon afterward arraigned on the charge of keeping a gambling house, and pleading not guilty, the hearing was set for Thursday next at 9 o'clock, and he was admitted to bail in the sum of $250 for his appearance at that time. The other parties who were arrested last night were dismissed, being simply lookers on in the game.

A LAMP EXPLOSION.

Which Damages the Tenement House of Ward Witham and the Furniture of Mr. J. B. Benoit.

At 8:20 o'clock last evening the fire bells sounded the ninth alarm of fire for the year 1882 which summoned the fire department to the double tenement house lately erected by Mr. Ward Witham, on East Milwaukee street, opposite C. W. Jackson's livery stable. The fire was undoubtedly caused by the explosion of a lamp, in the east part of the building, occupied by the family of Joseph B. Benoit. Mrs. Benoit and her daughter had, some twenty minutes before the fire was discovered, left the house for the purpose of making a call upon some friends a short distance away. Before leaving, they placed an oil lamp on a chair near their parlor door, the light turned down, and as the damage from the fire was at this point, the supposition is that the lamp exploded and set the building on fire. The fire was first discovered by some ladies who were passing, discovering smoke issuing from the house, and gave the alarm. When the fire department arrived the house was full of smoke, and it was difficult to discover the exact location of the fire, but after a stream of water was put in the smoke was cleared and the fire was speedily put out. The damage to the building is variously estimated at from one to two hundred dollars, and is fully covered by an insurance policy of $1,500 in the National of Hartford, represented in this city by John G. Saxe. The furniture of Mr. Benoit is insured for $1,000 in the Watertown of New York, Dimock & Hayner, agents. The damage to the furniture is principally from the deluge of water poured into the building, and from its hasty removal.

There was some misunderstanding even among the firemen, which was owing to the department being on hand before the arrival of Mr. Kelly. Mr. Foster, the newly elected first assistant engineer, (who is at present foreman of the East side engine company) was on duty with his company, and rightly interpreted the law, that he had no authority to command the department, as he had not yet been appointed by the council; therefore First Assistant Engineer Kelly, or Second Assistant Assistant Mahon, alone had authority to act, but while some were insisting on Mr. Foster assuming the charge, Messers. Kelly and Mahon arrived and there was no further necessity for questioning the right to give orders.

The East side engine was delayed somewhat last evening in getting to work on account of the defect in the steam heater which compels the company to wait until steam can be raised from cold water. It is hoped that the council will order the heater repaired at their next meeting, and thus avoid such delays in the future. The companies all turned out last evening with their usual promptness.

The Circuit Court.

The case of the City of Fond du Lac against J. C. Pierron and others, was commenced this morning in our Circuit Court. Pierron was at one time city treasurer of Fond du Lac and deposited the amount of $37,000 of the city funds in the Baker bank which failed last year. The city holds Mr. Pierron responsible, and seeks to recover the amount from him and his sureties. The case is an important one, and on both sides will be found the best legal talent in the State. The trial of this case will occupy several days.
